NEWBORN PROMISE PROJECT

The Need

Accumulating research today confirms what wisdom has long taught: the first five years of life are a critical time for healthy brain and emotional development. While parents bond with their baby and support their child's early learning stages, isn't it also the perfect time to begin sharing with them the heart and nature of God?

After all, becoming a parent is in itself a profoundly spiritual passage of life. Expecting and new parents start thinking more deeply about God and their own faith more than ever before. A body of knowledge, found in the Bible and from Christian experience throughout the ages, speaks directly to parents about this major life event—and equips them to grow up together in God.

The Scope

The Newborn Promise Project: A Spiritual Plan for Your Child's First Five Years is a six-session course to be conducted once a week or over one weekend. The material will be offered through churches, nonprofits, and online at www.grahamblanchard.com.

- Each session will focus on aspects of faith and ways parents can honor and aid God's plan for their child.
- A video-taped version of the sessions will include special guests such as authors, Christian psychologists, church pastors, and parents who will share their personal experiences.
- Other materials include participant and leader guides and other optional accessories.

The Legacy

In addition to equipping parents to guide their growing family's faith, the program will encourage growing relationships made during the course and building community through mentoring programs, small groups, and play groups for ongoing support.
